Lessons this Week

This week we started our second work plan for cycle three. We read a short story by Ray Bradbury called "The Veldt." It was originally published in 1950 and tells the story of a family that has every modern convenience including their house, which is fully automated. They even have a machine to tie their shoes! With all of the technological advances they still struggle as a family to communicate and live peacefully. This story really provided some good conversation about how technology affects family life today. The students continue to work on coordinate graphing by creating pictures plotting different coordinates. We used graphic organizers to start planning our writing for our five paragraph essays.
